INTELLIGENCE ALERT MEMORANDUM

SUBJECT: Deteriorating Situation in Bangladesh and Increasing Possibility of Indian Intervention

The situation within the armed forces in Bangladesh is deteriorating. Unless promptly contained, it could lead in short order to civil war in Bangladesh, an exodus of refugees across the border to India, and result in open Indian military intervention.

1. The normal command structure of the armed forces has been disrupted with junior officers and enlisted men reportedly making demands of their seniors, even of the new strong man, Major General Zia ur-Rahman. Some of these mutinous groups appear to be radical in orientation, and rumors in Dacca suggest that some may be operating under Indian influence.

2. During November 8, we have received the following information.

-- [redacted] the new government has arrested "25 percent" of the Bangladesh army officer corps and confined them to the Dacca Army Cantonment. Many of these officers are believed to be supporters of Major General Musharraf, killed on November 7.

-- The Dacca press has labelled the overthrow of Musharraf a "sepoy (enlisted man) mutiny." [redacted]

3. We doubt that India as yet has decided to intervene militarily in Bangladesh. Domestically, Prime Minister Gandhi, following her victory in court, is in a strong position. She has no need at present of a foreign victory to enhance her prestige at home. Therefore, we judge that she will not deliberately embark on intervention for internal political purposes. India's foreign relations would also argue against intervention -- at least until a good case could be made for it, such as would be furnished by a large movement of refugees into India. India's awareness that there would be a strong negative reaction from other countries, especially from the Muslim world, to intervention would be a major deterrent to precipitate action. Indian spokesmen have repeatedly warned, however, that the nation cannot be unconcerned over events in Bangladesh, and that chaos in that country followed by a movement of refugees into India, would force New Delhi to intervene regardless of the consequences. New Delhi has also warned that India would intervene if Bangladesh proclaimed itself an Islamic state.
